INDEX OF THE YEAR

The Nasdaq Next Generation 100 Index (NGX) is the perfect index for the times. With information technology and biotechnology hotter than ever, investors are clamoring for exposure to those industries.

At the same time, everyone already knows about the FAANGs. The megacaps that dominate the Nasdaq-100 may be great companies, but they don't offer the same supersized returns they did five or 10 years ago. They're just too big.

That's where the Nasdaq Next Generation 100 Index comes in. It tracks companies in the same industries—61% of the index is in information technology and health care—but with much smaller market capitalizations.

Specifically, it targets the 101st- to 200th-largest nonfinancial companies in the Nasdaq Composite—the stocks that are just outside of the Nasdaq-100. Ideally, the index could track the companies that are just hitting their stride, growing rapidly with plenty of upside.

NGX is the engine behind the Invesco Nasdaq Next Generation 100 ETF (QQQJ), winner of Best New ETF and Best New U.S. Equity ETF. Nasdaq was also a finalist for ETF Index Provider of the Year and is the index provider for ETF of the Year finalist, Invesco QQQ.
